

Douglas Maxton Inglis

Ph.D. Linguistics, University of Alberta, Canada 2014

Doug Inglis has worked in Mainland Southeast Asia since 1996 and is currently engaged in linguistic research and language-based development with Khamti Shan (Tai-Southwestern-Northern tier). His interests include Cognitive Linguistics (specifically Cognitive Grammar), language description, semantics, syntax, and text linguistics. He is currently completing a Grammar of Khamti Shan.

Publications:

- Forthcoming. Khamti Shan anti-ergative construction: A Tibeto-Burman influence? Linguistics of the Tibeto-Burman Area.
2017. Myanmar-based Khamti Shan orthography. Journal of the Southeast Asian Linguistics Society. 10.1:xlvii-lxi. (Available online)
2005. (co-authored with Nasaw Sampu, Wilai Jaseng, Thocha Jana) A preliminary Ngochang-Kachin-English lexicon. Technical Paper #107. Payap University. (Available online)
2003. Conceptual structure of numeral-classifiers in Thai. In Eugene E. Casad & Gary B. Palmer (eds). Cognitive Linguistics and Non-Indo-European Languages. CLR Series 18. 223-246. Mouton de Gruyter.
1997. Saliency hierarchy in a Molbog text. Journal of Translation and Textlinguistics 9:1-14.

Conference presentations:

2013. Oral stop consonants in Tai Khamti: An acoustic study in voice onset time. The 46th International Conference on Sino-Tibetan Languages and Linguistics. Dartmouth College. (Available online)
2013. Reference-point constructions in Tai Khamti using the proximal deictic mai2. International Cognitive Linguistics Conference 12. University of Alberta.
2011. From deictic to object marking in Tai Khamti: A cognitive grammar account. International Cognitive Linguistics Conference 11. Xi'an International Studies University, China.
2004. Cognitive grammar and lexicography. 2nd Asia International Lexicography Conference. Payap University and Southeast Asian Lexicography. (Available online)
2003. A preliminary phonology of Ngochang. 36th International Conference on Sino-Tibetan Languages and Linguistics. LaTrobe University. (Available online)